Few people realize there once was a fifth kind of regional cooking in China. Most have sampled the four major ones – Peking (and Mandarin), spicy, hot Szechuan, Cantonese and Shanghai foods. The sleeper is Hunan, which originated in the southcentral province of Hunan, located between Canton and Szechuan.

Hunan cookery refers to the hot, spicy style of cooking found in southwest of China. Compared with the above four mentioned style cookery, Hunan is heartier food and uses no monosodium glutamate and little, if any, cornstarch. Hunan meats also are smoked with hickory wood, tea leaves and other peelings before being cooked.
